BODY SUFFERS AGEING SYMPTOMS WITH TOO LITTLE SLEEP

Sacrificing sleep to longer working hours and nights on the town could bring about changes in the body similar to ageing, according to new medical research.

10.1. _____ Although the study was small - 11 young men aged between 18 and 27 took part - it found "striking changes" in the way their bodies functioned.

Chicago-based scientists found that successive nights of four hours' sleep affected the metabolism and hormonal functioning of the body. These changes "resemble some of the hallmarks of ageing". The scientists suggest that chronic sleep loss could increase the severity of age-related diseases such as diabetes and high blood pressure. 10.2. _____ Their volunteers biologically performed better when they had slept for more than eight hours. Scientists from the department of medicine at the university of Chicago notice that it has become common for people to cut back on their sleep. 10.3. _____ Many shift workers sleep an average of five hours a night on working days. The 11 young men slept eight hours a night for three nights, then four hours for six nights and then spent 12 hours a night in bed for a further week to recover from the sleep debt. 10.4. _____ "Less than one week of sleep curtailment in healthy young people is associated with striking changes in metabolic and hormonal function," the scientists say. Sleep debt "could have long-term negative effects on health. We suspect that chronic sleep loss may not only speed up the onset but could also increase the severity of age-related diseases such as diabetes, high blood pressure, obesity and memory loss."

Tests showed that the volunteers underwent profound changes in glucose metabolism during sleep deprivation, in some cases resembling patients with diabetes. 10.5. _____ Their ability to produce and respond to insulin fell by about 30%. A similar decrease in insulin response is an early warning of diabetes. Sleep deprivation also increased blood levels of the stress hormone cortisol, which is typical of much older people. All these abnormalities faded away during the recovery period, when the volunteers spent 12 hours in bed.

- A. What is considered as normal average sleep duration has decreased from about nine hours a night in 1910 to about 7.5 hours now.
- B. At the peak of sleep loss they took 40% longer than normal to regulate their blood sugar levels after a high carbohydrate meal.
- C. However, most of the volunteers enjoyed participating in the research and did not complain.
- D. The six nights of little sleep had a noticeable effect on their bodies.
- E. They also suggest that young, healthy adults may need more than the standard night's sleep.
- F. A study of the effects on the body of the sort of sleep-debt that is increasingly common at the end of the 20th century has had startling results.

CLIMBERS ON ALPINE RIDGE RESCUED BY TEXT MESSAGE

Two British climbers who were stranded on a Swiss mountain in a blizzard for three days were rescued by helicopter yesterday after texting an SOS message from a mobile phone to a friend in London. Rachel Kelsey, 34, and her partner, Jeremy Colenso, 33, were lifted to safety from a snowy ridge by a mountain rescue team after surviving two nights in sub-zero temperatures with little food or shelter.

The pair, who are both experienced climbers, had been huddled behind a large rock on an exposed, narrow, granite ledge since Saturday after bad weather closed in as they descended from the summit of Piz Badile near Lake Como in the Swiss Alps. As half a metre of snow fell around them and a fierce electric storm began, their descent had become impossible and they were forced to stop 3,000 metres up and wait until the weather improved or help could be called.

The alarm was raised by a London-based freelance photographer, Avery Cunliffe, after he received a desperate text message from his friends at 5 a.m. on Saturday morning asking for help and providing details of their whereabouts. Mr Cunliffe, also a keen climber, immediately contacted the rescue services in Geneva but bad weather prevented them from reaching the stranded couple until 8.15 a.m. yesterday.

Speaking after her ordeal Ms Kelsey, a qualified climbing instructor, said the situation had become critical by dawn yesterday and the couple had feared they might not be able to survive another night exposed to the extreme cold temperatures. "It was about minus -15°C for a lot of the time and incredibly damp with biting winds and snow. We had rationed our food but that was running out and we had eaten just two peanuts each in 12 hours," she said.

Ms Kelsey, who was born in South Africa, said she and Mr Colenso had prepared carefully for the expedition, which was supposed to have taken around 18 hours. "We had checked the weather forecast for a week before we set out and checked it again at the base. It was very good. Unfortunately a severe storm came in out of nowhere as we were coming down from the top. It was a huge electric storm - like nothing I have ever seen. The hair on our arms was standing on end and as the lightning struck, our head-torches would go off. We were concerned because of the metal equipment and we were attached to ropes, which can act as electricity conductors. The snow fell to levels about half a metre thick. We reached the only place where you can shelter for the night behind a large rock about half a metre wide by a metre high. We had a lightweight shelter for protection and we dug away the snow for a bit more cover. We realised it was impossible to descend any further so I texted five friends who I thought would be able to get in touch with the Swiss mountain rescue - that was about 1.30 a.m. in the morning. Then, about four hours later, Avery texted me back saying: 'I'm on the case!'"
